"Come and join us!" clubs and circles beckon

Let's join clubs and circles!

University life outside the classroom gives students an opportunity to not only broaden their horizons but also to develop a greater range of multifaceted interests. To this end, there are over 100 clubs and circles on campus that enrich the social and cultural understanding of Kyushu University students, influencing a wider community and ultimately contributing to the internationalization of the university.

1 Introduction

What is the difference between clubs and circles?

In general, "clubs" are officially supported by the university, and hence, are charged with the mission of representing the university in outside tournaments, competitions, and contests. With that aim in mind, "clubs" tightly organize their activities and practices. Therefore, their activities are more competitive compared to those of "circles".

On the other hand, a "circle" is an organization of students that aims to develop a mutual interest among its members. Therefore, circle activities and practices are more relaxed, and the schedule is more flexible.

Key Information

1. Senpai-Kohai System

A Confucian value that defines Japanese club culture is called the "senpai-kohai system". Senpai can be translated as "senior", while kohai is "junior". This system is a two-way relationship; the senpai is expected to mentor the kohai and take responsibility for their performances, while the kohai is expected to show more respect and behave more politely when senpais are around. An example of this system can be easily spotted at drinking parties and gatherings where kohai pours senpai's beers and senpai usually gives more treats financially.

2. Membership Fee

Club or circle members are sometimes expected to pay a membership fee, which is used for financing the activities or to run the club/circle community. This fee varies between clubs/circles and ranges between 2,000 - 5,000 yen per month.

2 Things to know

Difference between a club and a circle

CLUB

“部活”

“Bukatsu”

&

“サークル”

CIRCLE

1. Administrative Structure

---

Club activities are recognized as clubs after clearing various conditions such as being approved by the university and having an advisor, while circles are organizations that students set up on their own.

2. Activities

Club activities are aimed at achieving results in order to represent the university in competitions. Circles, on the other hand, are organizations in which students decide the content of their activities on their own initiative, so there is a wide range, from those that emphasize fun to those that focus on results.

3. Frequency of Activities

In clubs, activities are frequent like extracurricular activities in high school, in principle, students practice almost every day. On the other hand, circles tend to be more flexible, with participation being optional or infrequent.

CLUB

“部活”
“Bukatsu”

&

“サークル”

CIRCLE

4. Location of Activities

---

Many club activities are supported by universities or companies and can use university practice grounds. Circles often rent practice spaces from local governments, etc., and may not be able to use university practice spaces.

5. Activities expenses

---

The university subsidizes club activities affiliated with athletic associations, but not circles. Circles are mainly collected from club members.

6. Accredited: 公認 Non-Accredited: 非公認

---

Official Clubs (公認サークル): Official clubs meet specific criteria set by the university, such as establishment duration and membership numbers.

Unofficial Clubs (非公認サークル): Unofficial clubs are formed by friends with common interests. They operate freely and can include people outside the university community.

How to Join Clubs and Circles

1. Contacting a desired club

---

Once you have found a club you are interested in and their contact email address/SNS account, the next step would be to send them an email/message stating your intention to join. Club managers and circle members usually understand messages written in English; however, writing in simple Japanese may get you more attention. A sample email written in Japanese followed by an English translation is on the next page. In this email, a freshman named Tom is sending an email to a circle called "KUIFA".

2. Go and participate in their activities

Usually from April to May, clubs/circles welcome new students to discover their activities without an appointment.

If you find information about welcome events for new students or a trial period on their social media or website, you can go to the site and join them without sending them a message in advance.

Required Japanese language proficiency

Clubs and Circle are built on connections and communication.

Because of this, some international students may feel unsure about what level of Japanese is required.

To help you understand, we have divided the required Japanese level into three categories below. Please use this as a reference!

Japanese Skills: Lv1

Basic greetings are enough (around JLPT N5 level).

Many members can speak English or are eager to practice English.

It's an environment where everyone can enjoy activities regardless of language ability.

Japanese Skills: Lv2

You can understand basic Japanese (around JLPT N4 level).

You are able to understand everyday conversations.
– but the atmosphere is supportive and welcoming, and everyone is happy to enjoy activities together.

Japanese Skills: Lv3

You are expected to communicate in Japanese at nearly the same level as native speakers (around JLPT N3 level).

You need to understand casual Japanese as well as conversations using polite language (keigo). Members do not usually speak English, so communication in Japanese is required.

If you feel very anxious about communicating in Japanese, this environment may feel challenging.
